

Brown's Hotel, London

Rocco Forte's famous 5 star Brown's Hotel in Mayfair, opened in 1837, it is one of London's most established hotels, celebrating its 175th anniversary in 2012 and home to the Kipling suite, so called because it is believed that Rudyard Kipling penned 'The Jungle Book' whilst staying.

The hotel has also hosted Alexander Graham Bell (who made the first phone call in Europe from the hotel). The near 180 year old building provided a great challenge for the John Rowan and Partners team, appointed to provide cost management, project management and health and safety advice to combine heritage features with modern building technology, all whilst maintaining daily hotel business and minimising disruption for guests.

The team were able to deliver the project working alongside a contractor and other project team stakeholders all within the agreed budgets. The relationship with the client has developed further to front and back of house projects and additional suites.
